China's reported "caricature of the U.S. as the land of opportunity" has not helped curb a divisive electoral debate on the future of the world's most populous nation. Trying to provide an answer to the pressing question, "Why China, why now?," President Hu Jintao has been calling for public debate in the run-up to the 20th Communist Party Congress. From the perspective of China's foreign policy goals and management strategy, there is a key question at the heart of the debate: what is the purpose of China's rise? One reason why China is pressing ahead with economic liberalization is that it is keen to find new external markets to offset a slowing domestic economy. Also, China's image as the epitome of the "global power" is deeply ingrained in the minds of the local population and foreign business and government officials. For these reasons, further liberalization will help ensure domestic stability and also help China's image abroad. China has clearly lost faith in its ability to enter the global stage in a balanced way, and this has had a corrosive effect on Chinese foreign policy - it has become intolerant of other approaches and has adopted a confrontational stance in disputes with neighbors and the West. A typical case in point is China's fiercest border confrontation in history with the United States in November 2001 - a spat that has had no bottom line and has allowed China to dominate the agenda at the G-20 summit in November. The Bush administration has been keen to ensure a low profile at the G-20 to help minimize the impact of its military buildup, but the Chinese are not about to drop their protectionist instincts and risk the negative reaction from abroad. If China is changing its mind about global leadership then, to some extent, its neighbors, big and small, will also be reassured. Even though China is still a rising power, it clearly doesn't want to sacrifice its global image at the altar of achieving more modest domestic economic growth. China is well aware that the problem with becoming a global hegemon is that one does not want to compete with an empire. After all, it means turning many places into resources or battlefields. Yet what

Despite the fact that hypoglycemia has been recognized as a major cause of coma and death in critically ill patients, the pathophysiology of hypoglycemia remains poorly understood. In this report we describe the case of a 22-year-old man, who was comatose due to prolonged hypoglycemia. At the time of admission the patient's glucose level was 0.3 mmol/L and serum glucose level did not return after insulin infusion therapy. The main differential diagnosis included hypoglycemia, hyponatremia or Ewing's sarcoma. However, in the postanoxic period (4 hours after admission) lumbar puncture was performed and there were no abnormalities. The second lumbar puncture was performed on the fourth day after admission. The glucose level in cerebrospinal fluid (CSF) was normal
