On October 23, 2017, Governor Andrew Cuomo signed a law that will allow 62,000 civil servants to vote on a strike mandate. In short, the law will permit these workers to strike. It is a national disgrace, and a corruption of democracy, that public workers do not have the right to strike. This is a direct affront to democracy. The law is not a good one. It will likely lead to a strike that will take place on New York City streets instead of in the classrooms and labs where workers need to be. It also fails to address the question of whether striking in a coordinated fashion is fair to everyone affected. And it introduces the possibility that a public sector union will exercise an undemocratic power over a school district's budget that individual families have no way of appealing. These are just some of the problems the law will cause. The author of the law is the wonderful New York State Assembly member Deborah Glick. New York will become the 13th state in the nation to authorize public-sector strikes. These are the people who are on the front lines of any local crisis. School nurses, health aides, and public school teachers protect every child. Bus drivers keep everyone connected. Firefighters fight dangerous fires. While Albany's priorities are elsewhere, the people who operate these essential services are essential to democracy and public health and safety. If educators strike, we all know they are not taking the issue lightly. Even though they have been treated like indentured servants for years, they won't strike unless they are truly forced to. And they won't go on strike in sufficient numbers to really disrupt services. Remember, public education in New York City is already one of the lowest funded in the country. New York City faces a budget deficit of $3 billion. That is a lot of money. If a strike or a delayed school year caused the city to run out of money, the repercussions would be disastrous. The city estimates that a strike will cost about $300 million. The immediate reaction, however, will not be a total government shutdown. Public safety is still guaranteed. The things that actually matter most will still get done. The city has nine billion dollars in reserve to cover a few weeks. But the city will still be experiencing suffering. A school superintendent will have to choose between raising taxes or cutting teacher and aide salaries, or closing whole schools, or closing libraries. The people who transport folks in wheelchairs and the elderly

What's New in the?

Allison Jones Hello, I'm Allison Jones. I am a primary school teacher in the UK. I am currently teaching a group of 4 year olds called Drip Dry and they are mostly enjoying learning about animals and space. They are crazy about dinosaurs and I love seeing their enthusiasm for them. There are 926 comments on this post Space Rocks! I couldn't resist posting this. I love a good, colourful dinosaur drawing. I really love the look of this space rock. I might have to start a space rocks drawing group. What a great idea. That is the coolest picture I have seen in a long time. It reminds me of the asteroid that gave us dinosaurs. I had to go back and look at that old picture but even without the picture it is so cool. I am glad you posted this. This is all the proof anyone needs of the existence of dinosaurs. This is the image that is the only one on the internet that shows the image of a dinosaur, by an artist who has claimed to have created it, and appears to be accurate. If, like me, you've ever wondered how they would depict something that big on a to-scale picture, this is the answer. Too bad that he has deleted the original, and posted the altered one. But anyway, for everyone who is thinking about making a dinosaur, this is the image to use. It's only one line, easy to draw, and it looks amazing. I first saw this picture when I was a kid, and it struck me as completely fake. I almost didn't bother to look at the caption, afraid that it was just some sort of joke. But I went back to the site, found the original, and clicked through the comments. Then, after seeing some of the more amazing comments, I decided to post this. Frankly, this isn't as convincing as many of the photos I have seen. It's a nice picture. But the body outline is too vague, and the size of the head is about half that of the body. It's a pretty amazing picture, but it's a pretty amazing fake picture. dinosaur, she looks nice. i really like all the humans in the picture. the little girl looks cute. the dino looks young but it still looks great. i love the picture. it is very sweet. i think this picture should be part of the wall art for the classroom. Wow, something that really caught
