I am doing a cross-browser validation on the form using jQuery. The reason I am not using a plugin is because I want to understand the code better so that I can use it in other projects. The validation works for the fields that are required, however, for the fields that are optional, it does not submit the form if there are errors. How would I go about submitting the form with or without errors for the fields that are optional? My current code is: $("form").submit(function () { var name = $("#name").val(); var email = $("#email").val(); if (name == "" || email == "") { $(".info").fadeIn(); $(".info").html(" * Please enter a name and an email"); return false; } }); I tried adding the following to the conditional to submit the form with or without errors: return!$(".info").is(":visible"); However, this returns false for the whole if statement,

What's new:

This item is a Token Pack Volume 22 of Fantasy Grounds which contains 8 tokens to keep up with the ever growing world of D&D. However, this is not a simple token pack. Instead, it is directly tied to D&D and encompasses classes as they are currently presented in the 4th Edition fantasy setting as well as a few of 5th Edition's spells. Everything in a token pack must be both useful and fun, but also has to have some semblance of scale and I would not expect this to be all done. However, because of my experience with them, I will try to do my best to turn this into an informative and fun project as possible and hope to be honest with the flaws in it, i.e. Token Packs are designed to work at local restaurants or bars. With that in mind, I will try to be as expansive and thorough as possible. Any work I do will be shamelessly stolen from others, so feel free to credit me or just share a link. I will try to keep updates, but that is always up in the air as I have a tanking min-maxer all the way through Pathfinder and I plan to keep it! Any recommendations are appreciated! The Bestiary The Bestiary has 9 creatures in all with a total minimum health of 32 and a maximum of 600. Each of the 9 have all default entries, 12 racial entries, 6 key features (attack ability, defense ability, damage ability, complete, etc), feats and prerequisites for Races, Classes and Backgrounds. There are a total of 42 creatures overall! The main focus lies in dropdown descriptions, wild animal comparisons and statistics. Cannabis Cannabis is a Poisonous subcategory that is essentially a control scheme that the Poison condition stacks with. This is primarily a template with the minimum health being 50, 1d6 damage from nonlethal and 1d6 health loss every 10 rounds. Due to the fact that Cannabinoids, Plants, Animals and Chemicals are Rare qualities, each can only have a maximum of 4 entries. Combat Combat is, in my opinion, the heart of any game. Without combat, you lack just about every other feature. Fantasy Grounds was designed to make a quick and easy-to-use system and while it is still somewhat clunky and lacks in plenty of functions to make it a truly viable combat system, there are some great improvements. Below are links to the most important

Security systems and information are stored on different devices. Some of those systems that are connected to the Internet are accessible via email. Some individuals are notified automatically when a harmful message appears by email. This notification may occur when someone sends a message containing a virus or if a worm exploits a bug in a web browser or computer application. A system that does not respond to a notification is considered not safe and is vulnerable. The first step in remedial action, such as isolating the infected system, is often to identify the origin of the message. There is a need to automatically identify the sender and send a response, or notification, to the individual or company hosting the device where the first message was generated. A new email system, host-based email security (H.BES) is the result of a need to develop a network-based security system that provides a continuous response to an email address.Q: Constructor of a static member class isn't invoked for collections I want to treat certain types of lists differently from the other lists. I'd like to make a collection class and a list class. For the list, I just want the usual behavior, nothing special about it. However, for the collection class, I want a collection where each element can only be associated with one value. This is easily done by declaring the Add method only for the collection class. The problem is the constructor: class List { static List() { item = default(T);
