Primaria Santillana PDF for offline view the book.Q: How to implement python decorators for classes? I am pretty new to python and trying to learn about decorators, so please bear with me. I have a class, say Point, that looks like class Point: def __init__(self,x,y): self.x=x self.y=y def distance(self,other): return abs(self.x-other.x) + abs(self.y-other.y) I want to define a function that basically measures the distance between any 2 points given to it. I want to have a decorator that allows me to implement this function for my own Point class as a stand-alone function. So I am thinking to write something like

@decorator def my_distance(self,other): return
    abs(self.x-other.x) + abs(self.y-other.y)

In python, I think it would be a good idea to use decorator classes, as defined in this document, the thing is, I don't know how to write such code in python

A: This is a quick & dirty answer, just in case. The canonical way to decorate a function is indeed with decorators. Since you are looking for making a standalone function, you can just write a function that creates a new wrapper, and composes it with your original function. The wrapper function creates a decorator, and you compose it with the original function.

def myDistance(x, y):
    def wrap(func): #Get the original function, func_orig, we need it in the decorator function return lambda *args, kwargs: func(func_orig(*args, kwargs))
    return wrap @myDistance
