The use of flow-cytometric assessment of STAT1-associated proteins for the evaluation of oral HIV-1 infection. Mild to moderate chronic inflammatory response was documented in the oral epithelium of HIV-1-infected subjects compared with control individuals. In contrast, chronic inflammation is not found in the oral mucosa of untreated HIV-1-infected individuals during primary infection. The purpose of this study was to compare the expression pattern of activation-induced cytokine secretion in the oral epithelia of HIV-1-infected and control subjects. The expression pattern of STAT1-associated proteins was analyzed using the flow-cytometric assay. We compared the patterns of CCL5, IL-6, and IFN-alpha expression in HIV-1-infected individuals with moderate to severe oral epithelium disruption (mild to moderate chronicity: MMC) and HIV-1-infected individuals with normal mucosa (normal: NM). The mean percentage of cells expressing high levels of CCL5 in the MMC group was 6.7 +/- 5.3 and 0.3 +/- 0.3, respectively. The mean percentage of cells expressing high levels of CCL5 in the NM group was 0 c6a93da74d
