This is the sample project for a utility that retrieves the MAC address of the computer and stores it in a text file, so the user can save that MAC address for his/her future need.

C:\data\MacCALC_V1.1.0\ 1. Made CALC work in 64bit mode. 2. Added MAC address logger 3. Optimized the code, eliminating some of the clutter and putting everything in a single block of code for ease of readability. 4. Added a memory leak bug fix. 5. Added the "Address only, not MAC" option. 6. Optimized the code, eliminating some of the clutter and putting everything in a single block of code for ease of readability. 7. Added the option to save the MAC address to the log file so the user can search through the file for the MAC address. 8. Added the option to search the log file, set the delimiter, and perform a search. 9. Added the option to search the log file, set the delimiter, and perform a search. 10. Added the option to save the data to a CSV file. 11. Fixed the bug that when the button is pressed more than once, the data is repeated from the last time the button is pressed. A: In the CREATE_CALC_LICENSE_FILE macro: IF EXIST "%~dp0\license.txt" (IF "%~1" == "/" (ECHO "%~1" EXIT /B) ELSE IF "%~1" == "/" (ECHO "%~1" EXIT /B) ELSE (SET MACADDR=%~1 EXIT /B)) ELSE (SET MACADDR=%~1 EXIT /B) A better way would be to use the -x switch to set it to the next parameter instead of the default behavior of using the next command line argument: SET MACADDR=%~1 -x This way you don't need the 2edc1e01e8
