This is actually quite a versatile feature. Unlike other online sharing sites, GetApp allows you to share entire folders on its site, so you can invite your colleagues, friends and family to have a look at what you've been working on without having to send them individual files. The site also allows you to save each individual comment to an independent page, so you can even create a page that can be published for anyone to read later, and even find yourself with each and every one of them in an archive. If you don't want to use GetApp, Adobe offers another service called Adobe UserVoice designed to help you aggregate your critiques. Users just type their comments in a simple text area, and Adobe saves each one in a folder to help you keep track of what was expressed in your forums. Although the site doesn't offer that same level of feedback as GetApp, you still get the benefit of having your comments organized and saved. MacNewsWorld Review Staff

Unfortunately, it's a feature that's usually used for constructive critiquing. But since the site is geared toward photographers, there's enough of a chance that users will use it for flakiness. MacNewsWorld Review Staff

Luckily, the effects of this click-happy photographer aren't serious. Mostly, it's just that some on-screen menus could be more prominent, so users are forced to keep an eye on the mouse and do their work closely. At least one auto-generate button has been replaced with a more efficient autofill option.

The Eraser Tool (E) can be used to erase parts of your image by removing color differences in the image. It's helpful when you want to layer an image and want to remove elements of that layer before adding additional ones in. Hold the Control key while using the Eraser. You can also merge the Eraser with the Brush. When you're done, use the Dodging and Burning Tool (P) to fix areas of the image. When creating graphics, you'll want to help your design stand out from the crowd. Using Color and Adjustment (C&A) is an easy way to make the creative parts pop. To do so, use the C&A tools with the photo's saturation setting. Red, green, and blue are controls that affect the color you see. For example, if you increase the saturation, the colors will be more brightly popping. If you want a softer look, decrease the saturation. The Color balance controls affect the balance of the color in the image. The Spyglass (Eye Dropper) tool is great for reading out colors in the image. To use it, click the tool and click an area of color in the image. It will then make an eye dropper icon appear in the top left corner of the image. You can then click any other selected area you'd like to use the color from. The result, of course, is the color from the original object being placed into the new object. Instead of erasing pixels, you work with shapes to remove unwanted areas. To help with that, any color can be locked to a specific area in a shape layer by inking any area in the shape layer. This stops any color changes from over-locking to any areas on that layer. The same is true for selection. 933d7f57e6
