Cuprinol is a 1,2-naphthoquinone, recently isolated from Cupriavidus metallidurans CH34, which is a bacterium that has a tremendous potential for application in toxic metal immobilization, degradation of recalcitrant organic pollutants and biohydrogen production. Previously, we and others have shown that the presence of cuprinol facilitates the reduction of elemental copper and its oxides and hydroxides, and increased long term in situ degradation of several xenobiotics such as dimethyl phthalate and pentachloro f988f36e3a
