A conventional color image pickup apparatus will be described in the following. A digital camera is constituted such that pixels constituting a color image sensor

(hereinafter called CCD) are arranged in a 2-dimensional matrix, and a color signal representing color information of a pixel is read for each color through the pixel array by turning on the pixels. In the case of an electronic still camera, a color filter is arranged in correspondence with each pixel so as to form a color image sensor. Then, a color image is formed based on the color image signal outputted from the color image sensor. Here, it is the case where, in order to make the camera compact and portable, the digital still camera adopts such a constitution that the CCD and the color filter are arranged in a single line array to be able to read a two-dimensional color image signal (Japanese Patent Laid-Open No. Hei 7-117179). Furthermore, in the case of a digital video camera, in the same manner as the above-described digital camera, the CCD and the color filter are arranged in a single line array to be able to read a two-dimensional color image signal (Japanese Patent Laid-Open No. Hei 7-117179). However, the 04aeff104c
