How long can it take? www.clubhamac.fr 5/5 (2 votes) Loading, Please Wait... 13 Sep 2017 // Even though I like the first game. It just didn't click with me. I'm not saying it's not a good game. What I'm saying is it didn't click with me. It's just too dark, too anti-social, all I want is a game where I can sling a bullet from a machine gun or sniper rifle with a joystick or game pad and just love being a badass. I have one of those bizarro memories of the original and hope that the remastered game will have much more of a friendly glow that we're all missing on our modern shooters. Sniping isn't always a solitary pursuit. I've decided to play Sniper Elite 4 with my dog, a sweet little girl named Emma and my husband. They've been both into the series since it first came out and the most fun we've had so far has been at the end of our long walks listening to Emma's constant barking and trying to decide which direction the perp might be coming from. My plan is to meet up at Friday Harbor on Whidbey Island and sneak around, finding those secret missions. If anything goes wrong at the start we just head to the nearest US port and take a ship to Mexico City where I can play on my own or with the bombastic duo. There has been nothing quite like this coming out of the indie game sphere in ages. Even Black Mesa has been a bit of a social experience. For over a year I've been trading classes and skills with TF2 players for nothing more than half an hour of fun. Good, old fashioned, competitive multiplayer. The only main difference is that we're all playing together with magic. All the blood, the sweat, the tears and the sniffles have been replaced with laughter. With the games that we're working on, sometimes I'll think how awesome it would be if we could get all of them out at once. Where we've got one game we can work on in fits and starts, we've got four or five we want to get off the ground. We're all very excited. Sniping (Sniper, Sniper Elites etc) is just stupidly fun and we've all got a lot of time on our hands, what could be better than that. We've only got two months to
