There are a few other controversial elements to consider. I could not get the disc to run OK with a DVD writer. However, it was able to read and write VOB files from a DVD+RW. Lightroom CC, which I also have, was not able to open the disc and I was not able to get Lightroom to work either. However, the program worked fine otherwise. I also was not able to burn at full speed with the same disc, and the program seemed to be choking the disc with a lot of data. Burns seemed more like freezes or pauses than actual speed. So, you'd have to get a newer DVD drive or get a better one. The 0% will be back at some point after the Black Friday: the ad was taken down last week as part of its holiday sale. As for the camera and computer system, I was more than happy to see that it came with its own tripod. It works great for images taken on a steady tripod. However, it's just not worth the money if you're shooting handheld. Instead, look into using a backup camera with a kit, or renting a tripod.
