The Dodge mode is located in the Edge Layers panel on the left, and isolates areas of the image that are very light or very dark, increasing or decreasing their intensity. You can also perform photo and channel-based corrections in the Layers panel. The Red Eye tool also allows you to correct this effect. Simply select the Red Eye tool, then select an eye to begin the adjustment. The tool automatically highlights locations where the eye is the highest or lowest. You can click on the highlighted eye to resize or rotate the selected eye, or you can drag the eye to reposition it. The interface is straightforward, and the program is fast and responsive. You can work comfortably at 1920 by 1080 pixel, even if you have a 13-inch laptop. An advanced feature that should be familiar to anyone who has used Photoshop before is Content-Aware Fill. The three tabs at the top are Interface, Effects and Creative Cloud that works on its own.
